nearly 500 thrift institutions have failed during the past five years and many more institutions are likely to fail in the near future in this paper we discuss the role of the government in regulating and insuring depository institutions and then discuss the causes of and regulatory responses to the financial troubles of the thrift industry to assist in the examination and regulatory process we develop a statistical model that identifies key financial variables that affect the likelihood that a thrift institution will fail we then assess the classification and prediction accuracy of the model finally we examine the effect of the same key financial variables on the dollar losses to the fslic once an institution fails

this paper asks two main questions 1 what makes some asset price bubbles more costly for the real economy than others and 2 when do costly bubbles occur we construct a model of rational bubbles under credit frictions and show that when bubbles held by banks burst this is followed by a costly financial crisis in contrast bubbles held by ordinary savers have relatively muted effects banks tend to invest in bubbles when financial liberalisation decreases their profitability 1st prelim page
