michael andindilile in the anglophone literaryñlinguistic continuum english and indigenous languages in african literary discourse interrogates obi waliís 1963 prophecy that continued use of former colonial languages in the production of african literature could only lead to ësterilityí as african literatures can only be written in indigenous african languages in doing so andindilile critically examines selected of novels of achebe of nigeria ngugi of kenya gordimer of south africa and farah of somalia and shows that when we pay close attention to what these authors represent about their african societies and the way they integrate african languages values beliefs and cultures we can discover what constitutes the anglophone african literaryñlinguistic continuum this continuum can be defined as variations in the literary usage of english in african literary discourse with the language serving as the base to which writers add variations inspired by indigenous languages beliefs cultures and sometimes nation specific experiences
